Dog

My name is Digger Dog. I'm an expert on safe digging.
I want you to join my team. So study all the safety tips in this book.
Then go to the back cover, peel off the official Top Dogs badge, and wear it proudly.

Know Your Lines

Your house is connected to wires and pipes that run underground.

These are called utility lines.

Can you spell them out using Digger's Decoder?

Know Your Flags

Sometimes, flags are placed in your yard to mark the utility lines so workers and parents can dig safely. Each utility line is marked with a different color. Color the flags, then use your crayon to follow the utility line over and under other lines to reach its utility.

Digger Don't

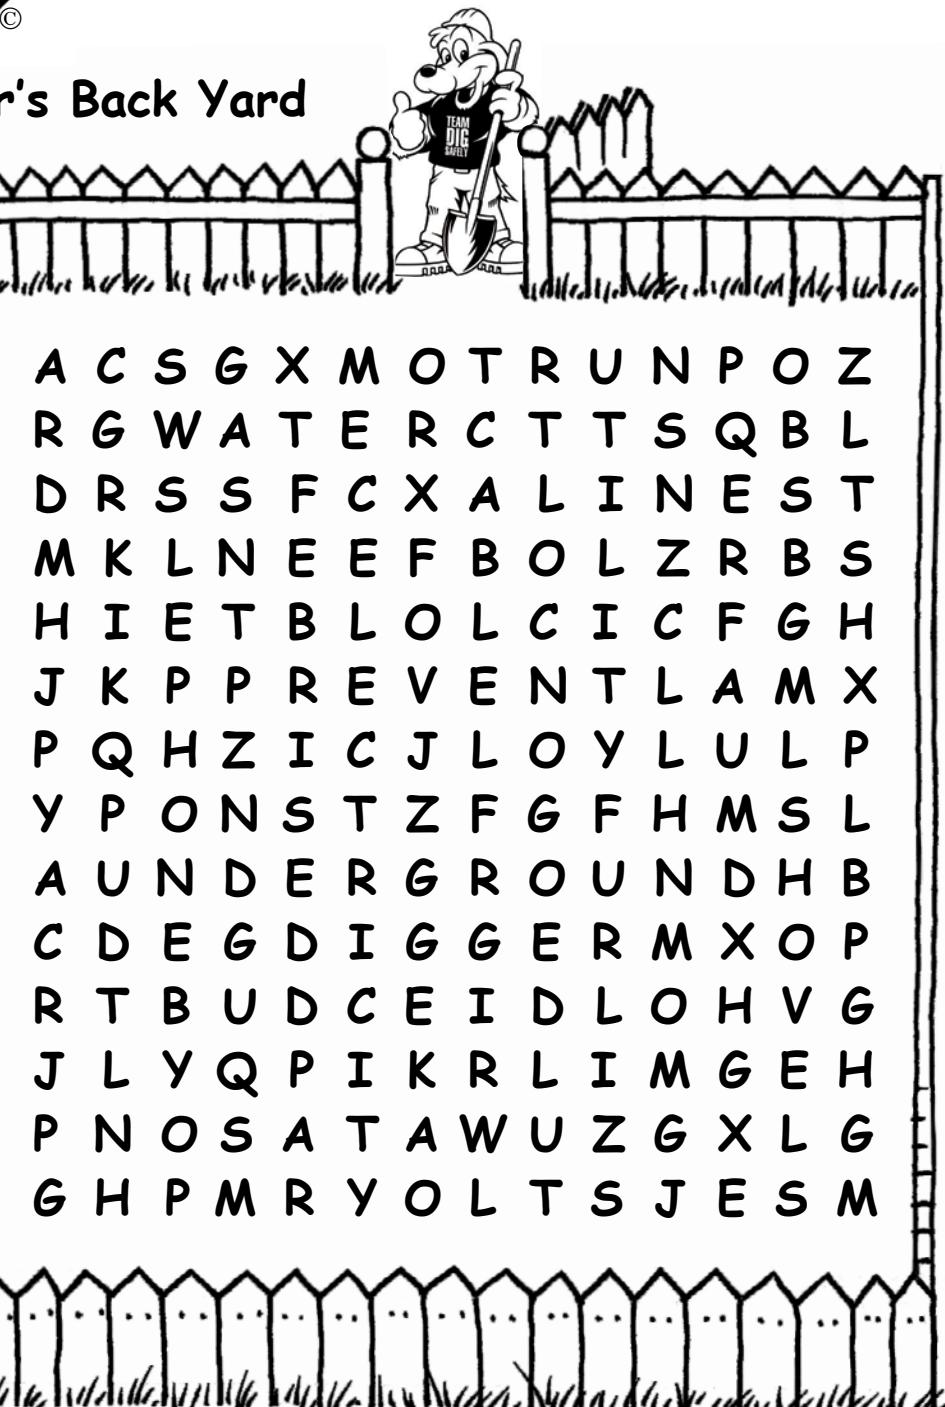

Flags help the construction workers dig safely. Never move the flags.

Your Nose Knows

Gas leaks can be dangerous. When you smell gas, take the advice of my friend, Skunk Sniffy. Use Digger's Decoder to create Sniffy's important message.

We've talked about things underground. Now look up. Overhead electrical lines can shock and hurt people. Using Digger's Decoder, figure out what this guy, Ben Zapped, is doing wrong.

Know What's Up

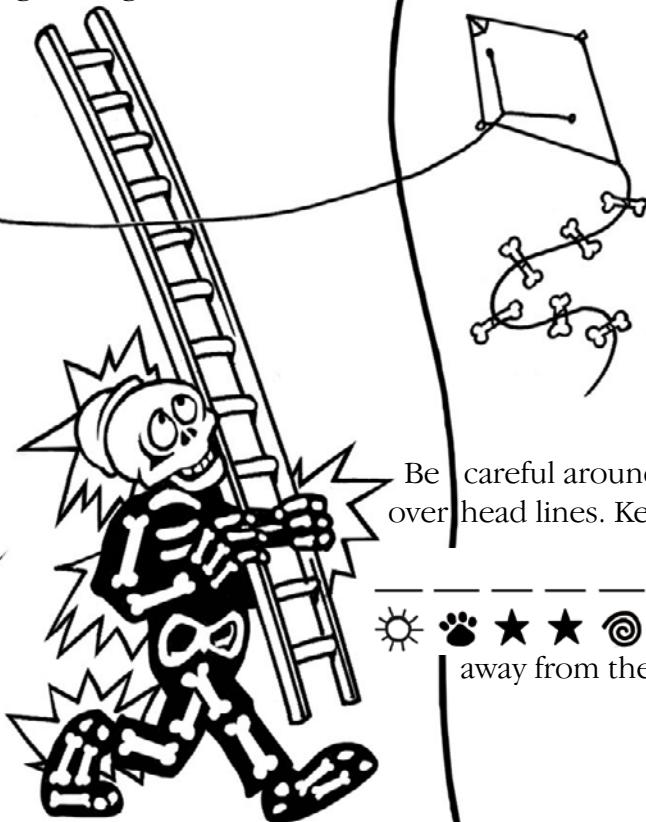

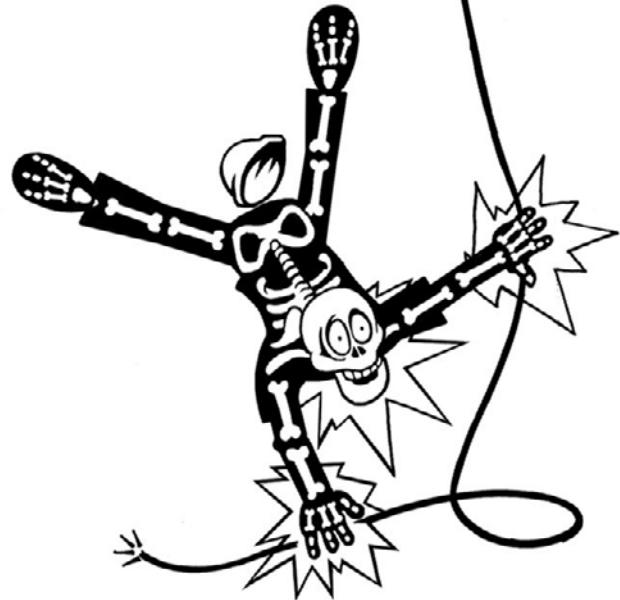

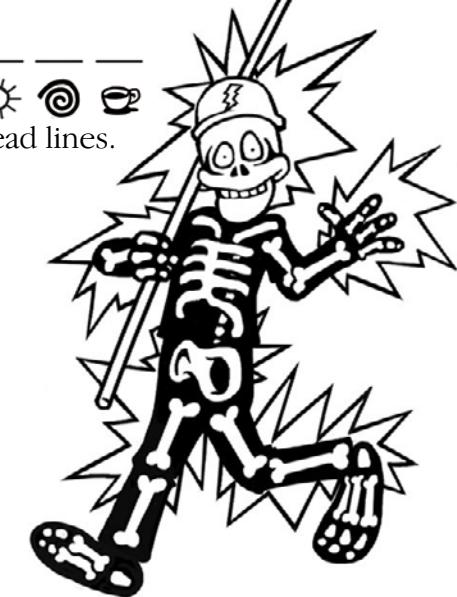

Don't fly

or raise long objects like fishing near overhead lines.

Be careful around overhead lines. Keep away from them.

And if you ever see overhead lines that are touching the ground,
